MTB Orienteering in Sweden: On the way to excellence

Sweden with respect to the number of active athletes, the number of events and the overall awareness. I had hoped, but honestly not imagined, that Sweden would be this successful already in 2013."

As Magnus puts it, the secret of the success lies with "the dedication that many of our athletes have shown during the recent years, for example paying out of their own pocket for participation in the events." Not forgetting the support from the Swedish Orienteering Federation, "which actively works to promote and establish all four orienteering disciplines", Magnus also highlights "an open-minded and enthusiastic MTBO core team supported by the Federation", as another important factor in this dynamic and ambitious development.

But the effort of building a real team should be based on the youngest, and Magnus is keen to emphasise that "We have some really dedicated and talented junior athletes that now focus on MTBO. From the MTBO core team we have recognised that our juniors are a very important group to support in aiming for long-term success. We have now included separate classes in the Swedish MTBO Cup for junior males and females, with prize money.

This has been possible with support from the federation and 'Gynnarna', a support group among older Swedish orienteers." And, not least, "we have worked actively to have MTBO as a discipline in the Swedish Orienteering Gymnasium in Mora, in collaboration with ski orienteering", and with foot orienteering in other Gymnasiums across the country.

The future seems to be looking good. "Our goal is to be on the top and to compete for all the gold medals in 2016." Sweden's big star Cecilia Thomasson has shown that it is possible, and the motivation is huge. "Already this year we can see that we have taken a big step with some good World Cup results", says Magnus Wallenborg, giving as an example "Oskar Lund, he finished 25th in the World Cup overall." But 2016 will be the year to look out for Sweden at its best: "Then we will see some of our very promising juniors entering the Elite class. Already now we have a strong team of more experienced and younger riders in the men's class, and they will be able to motivate and develop each other."

Four gold medals at World Championships

Peter Arnesson – now a magnet for the media

Written by Erik Borg

Peter Arnesson surprised everyone, and not least himself, last winter: he was crowned a world champion for the first time, and furthermore he achieved that feat four times! In Kazakhstan in March he was victorious in all the individual competitions and won gold and silver in the relays.

"It was a great time for me after the Championships, with a lot of interest in what I had done", says Peter. During the Championships there was a lot of news about him and his remarkable successes on Swedish Television and in the sporting press more widely.

Still plenty to aim for

Even after such an achievement, the 33-year-old believes there is still plenty to aim for. "I am still lacking overall victory in the World Cup, and that will be my main goal for the coming winter", Peter says. He has twice achieved second place overall in the World Cup. "The European Championships – in Tyumen, Russia in March – are also important, but not as big for me as the World Cup".

He still lacks a gold medal in one format at the World Championships – the men's relay.

Success after tough period with illness

Eight months before his World Championship achievements, Arnesson couldn't train at all. "In May last year, whenever I tried to exercise I got sick afterwards. I knew something was wrong. At the beginning of June I decided that I wouldn't train at all, and I had no physical activity from June to late August. The disease period was tough mentally, not least until I found out what was wrong with me. I had no idea when I might be back", says Peter.

In July it was confirmed that it was the bacterial disease Twar, which can give rise to pneumonia. From the beginning of October he was back in good training with the World Championships as the big goal. On the way to his remarkable successes in Kazakhstan, he took gold in the Long distance at the European Championships. "It means so much that I finally managed to win. The joy was even greater because of the illness I had just seven months beforehand".

Asked why it went so well, he says: "The most important thing was that I just focused on my own performance and did what I could to make it possible. Then also the terrain in Kazakhstan suited me. I have learnt to adapt my way of skiing according to different circumstances. For example it fitted perfectly for me with the tracks as soft as they were at the beginning of the championships".

Now a better orienteer

Peter's great performances were the result, he says, of giving more attention to his technical training. "I was in good physical shape, but I have been as strong physically sometimes in the past. The difference from earlier was that my navigating went so well. My goal for the Championships was not medals, but that I should have the 'race of my life' in technical terms. In fact I managed to do it twice, in both the Sprint and Middle distance. The other three races were also really good".

Success at this level can alter an athlete's outlook on life, but not in Peter's case: "Not that much has changed in the way I approach my sport, but the pressure I feel might be less great, now that I have achieved what has been my ambition for years".

This year Peter's training has so far gone very well, and he feels his form is still improving. "It's always possible to be better, and a big motivation for me is to work to be even better. Not all training sessions are enjoyable, but most of them are. Overall I enjoy my training when I experience the improvements that come from it".

Five medals for Kvåle

At the European Championships in Madona, Latvia, the Norwegian Hans Jørgen Kvåle took five medals, including gold at Middle distance and in the relay. The Russian athlete Tatiana Rvacheva – née Kozlova – won two individual gold and one relay gold in Madona.

In the women's class Tove Alexandersson from Sweden was a double winner in Kazakhstan; she won the individual Sprint, and the Sprint Relay together with Peter Arnesson. A superb athlete the whole year around, Tove also won two silver medals in the World Orienteering Championships in Finland in the summer. Anastasia Kravchenko (Russia) and Mervi Pesu (Finland) won the other individual golds in Kazakhstan and Russia won both relays.
